

Food Inc.

Not many people know or care where their food comes from, which is why the directors of Food Inc. set out to expose the truth behind the food industry in America. The directors were able to lift the corporate veil of the major food corporations; exposing to the world the brutal truths behind how they run their businesses, cutting corners and tainting our food supply so that they are as efficient and profitable as possible. The first segment which compares the chicken farmers Vince Edwards and Carole Morison, who are both on contract with major companies, shows the audience that how we perceive modern-day farmers is actually very different from the harsh reality of what they do. The segment "In the Grass" then directly contrasts with that of the corporate farmers by showing how a true farmer, Joel Salatin, runs and operates his whole farm without hiding anything. Joel and a handful of workers are able to produce food all naturally without cutting any corners or using any sort of assembly line machinery and yet are just as efficient as the major companies. The directors use the differences between how the major food corporations raise and process their animals and crops to that of an all naturally organic farmer to convince the audience that the industrialization of the food market is dangerously inhuman and increasingly less naturally wholesome.

A nice day out, beautiful aerial views, good music and a happy farmer driving in his truck with his dogs, all lead the audience to believe that Vince Edwards is what we believe to be an actual farmer. The audience soon finds out that he simply owns a couple chicken coops and that he isn't really a farmer at all, but a mere pawn in Tyson's corner of the food industry. These oversized chicken coops are nothing like a good old-fashioned barn on a farm where you raise chicken, they are mechanized factories where Vince manufacture's chickens. He admits that his chickens never see the light of day and that "it's all a science, Tyson's got it figured out. If you can grow a chicken in 49 days, why would you want one you can grow in 3 months? More money in your pocket." The directors include this to convince the audience that all these food corporations care about is profitability. These food corporations are choosing to sacrifice all the nutritional value of our food for an increase in revenue. Food corporations feed the chickens that we are eating all sorts of growth hormones to make them grow as fast as physically possible in terrible conditions and then give them antibiotics to help make sure their terrible living conditions don't affect their health. This followed by the fact that Tyson representatives wouldn't allow the directors to see inside the coops, even though Vince was willing to show them around, raises concerns. Tyson does not want people to see how their product is produced because they realized once people see the horrible conditions that these chickens are
