

Chapter 7: The Risk and Term Structure of Interest Rates

- Investment grade: AAA-BBB; fallen angels: bonds that were once investment grade but are now junk
- Commercial paper: short-term, unsecured debt issued by both governments and corporations that must be repaid in less than a year.
 - 1/3 of all commercial papers held by money-market funds; ratings of P-1 to P; no junk grade.
- Bond Yield = US Treasury yield + Default risk premium
- When treasury yields move, all other yields move with them; positive relationship between yield and risk
- Michael Milken, Drexel, junk bonds trades, and LBOs
- Privately issued bonds are taxable bonds; Munis are tax-exempt
 - Equivalent tax-exempt bond yield = (Taxable bond yield) x (1 - tax rate)
- Term structure of interest rates: the relationship among bonds with the same risk characteristic but different maturities; a plot of the term structure with YTM on the y-axis and time on the x-axis is the yield curve.
 - Interest rates of different maturities tend to move together; the bulk of the variation between short and long term rates are in the same direction.
 - Yields on short term bonds are more volatile than yields on long term bonds.
 - Long term yields tend to higher than short term yields.
- Expectations hypothesis: long-term rates are the average of expected future short-term rates. Explains why interest rates of different maturities move together.
- Liquidity premium theory: long term bonds are riskier than short term bonds. Explains all three points.
- Inverted yield curve is a valuable forecasting tool because it predicts a general economic slowdown. Since it's the average of future short term rates, it shows the expected fall in short term rates.
- Term spread: difference between 10 year and 3-month yields; when term spreads fall, GDP growth falls 1 year later.

Chapter 8: Stocks, Stock Markets and Market Efficiency

- Residual claimant: last in line after all the other creditors.
- Limited liability: losses cannot exceed their initial investments.
- Several ways to value stocks
 - Fundamental value depends on firm's future profitability
- Dividend-discount model: stock prices depend on the current level of dividends, the growth rate of dividends, the risk-free interest rate and the equity risk premium.
 - Price today = Div tomorrow + Price next year
- Theory of efficient markets: prices of all financial instruments, including stocks, reflect all available information; markets adjust immediately and continuously to changes in fundamental values.
- Bubbles: persistent and expanding gaps between actual stock prices and those warranted by fundamentals.

Chapter 9: Derivatives: Futures, Options, and Swaps

- Difference between futures and bonds
 - Derivatives offer investors an easy way to profit from price declines (short selling).
 - One person's loss is another person's gains.
- Purpose of derivatives is to transfer risk from one person to another.
 - 3 main categories: forwards and futures; options and swaps
- Forward: agreement between a buyer and seller to exchange a commodity for a specified amount on a future date. Difficult to resell to someone because they are private contracts.
 - futures: forward contract that has been standardized and sold through an organized exchange.
 - Seller has short position; buyer has long position
 - two parties make agreement with a clearing corporation
- Margin account: clearing corporation requires both parties to place a deposit with the corporation itself.
- Marking to market: posting daily gains and losses on the contract
- Both sides attempt to decrease risk (hedge).
- Sellers of futures are betting that prices will fall, while buyers are betting that prices will rise (speculators)
- As long as there are arbitrageurs, on the day when a futures contract is settled, the price of a bond futures contract will be the same as the market price of the bond.
 - arbitrage: two financial instruments with the same risk and promised future payments will sell for the same price.
- Interest-rate swaps: agreements between two counterparties to exchange periodic interest rate payments over some future period, based on an agreed-upon amount of principal – what's called the notional principal.
 - The bank is the fixed-rate payer; (US bond rate + risk premium) the swap dealer is the floating-rate payer (LIBOR).
 - Useful when one can borrow more cheaply at one maturity but would prefer to borrow at different maturity.
 - Different between the benchmark and swap rate is the swap spread.

Chapter 11: The Economics of Financial Intermediation

- Role of financial intermediaries
