"Teens are very influential during puberty. Since adolescence is important for the development of several cognitive areas of the brain that deal with social relationships, teens and young adults are prone to peer and social influences. This is largely due to the fact that some brain systems are implicated in a mechanism which underlies the increased desire to earn approval of peers (Johannessens, 2015). As such, teens will do as much as possible to get this approval, which in some cases will lead to changing clothing based on what they see online, or following a trend that became popular in a short period of time. This desire makes teens very influential during puberty.
