Chapter Outline

Abraham Lincoln was a highly visible leader who had a significant influence on people across the United States and around the world. Yet the leadership qualities Lincoln exemplified are especially relevant to the many leaders who quietly go about the business of leading teams, companies, and communities' day after day. Every company, sports team, government agency, family, nonprofit organization, social cause, and community group needs good leadership to succeed.

I. Why We Need Effective Leadership (01.01, PPT Slides 4-9)

People think that they will recognize a good leader when they see one. Sometimes, though, charismatic people are perceived to be leaders, regardless of whether leadership skills back up the charisma. Today, people are beginning to expect more than a charismatic smile and a firm handshake from leaders.

a. Defining Leadership

Leadership is an influence relationship among leaders and followers who intend real changes and outcomes that reflect their shared purposes. Exhibit 1.1 identifies the key components of leadership.

Leadership includes six components:

- Influence
- Intention
- Personal responsibility and integrity
- Change
- Shared purpose
- Followers

Leading and following are activities that require other people. Effective leaders and followers require similar skills so they can switch roles if needed to accomplish a goal.

b. Emergent Leadership
