Right now, indirect object pronouns follow the subject pronouns, and direct object pronouns follow the indirect object pronouns. So you put indirect object pronouns first, and direct object pronouns second. This is the opposite of what you learned in English class. The indirect object pronouns are always placed before the direct object pronouns.

All the grammar rules about indirect object pronouns are the same in Spanish. The only difference is that in Spanish, indirect object pronouns are placed before direct object pronouns. This is why you learned in the last lesson to put the indirect object pronoun before the direct object.

Remember, indirect object pronouns replace indirect objects. So if you have a sentence like "I gave the book to my friend," you would say "I gave the book to him." In Spanish, you would say "I gave the book to him." The indirect object pronoun "le" replaces "to him," and the direct object pronoun "lo" replaces "the book." So you would say "I gave it to him." In Spanish, you would say "Le di el libro." The indirect object pronoun "le" is always placed before the direct object pronoun "lo." This is the opposite of what you learned in English class.
