Abstract: From 1999 when Nigeria returned to civil rule till date, there have been several cases of terrorism which have taken thousands of lives and have damaged millions of properties across the country. The premeditated use or threat of use of violence by some sects has not abated but has assumed a hazardous magnitude. These violent agitations have gradually taken terror dimension, hence, becoming a serious threat to peaceful co-existence and the people and national development. The thrust of this paper is to investigate military financial management with much emphasis on the readiness of the Nigerian Armed Forces to fight terrorism. The paper argues that proper allocation to, and sound financial management of the Defence sector is a key to effective and efficient security forces that can meet the security needs of the country. It therefore recommends that all the funds that go into the defence ministry should be judiciously used to properly equip and maintain the country's security operatives and provide for their welfare; as this will improve the security condition of the country. The Federal government should take good account of the funds allocated to the Armed Force and make sure that there is proper accountability. It also suggests that there should be transparency and accountability in the sector which will inform the public that freedom is not obtained at zero cost; that funds are well spent for this purpose and spending is carefully controlled.

Key Words: Boko Haram, Defence Sector, Financial Management, Military, Nigerian Armed Forces, Terrorism.

1. INTRODUCTION:

The Nigerian Military comprises of the Army, Navy and Air Force. According to the Federal Constitution [1], the Armed Forces are saddled with the responsibilities of defending the territorial integrity of Nigeria on land, sea or air. Unfortunately, the Nigerian Military which is supposed to be the most potent element of Nigeria's national security has recurrently complained of inadequate funding from the Federal Government. Observably, the failure of the Nigerian Armed Forces to win the war against terrorism is not due to insufficient funding, rather poor military financial management has played a major role in the poor performance of the military. For instance, from 2008 to 2013, the Federal Government allocated N444.6 billion, N233 billion, N264 billion, N348 billion, N921.9 billion as well as N1.055 trillion to the Nigerian security and Defence sector respectively. According to Omede [2], the strategic nature of the military's responsibilities has made it enjoy increased resource allocations especially for the procurement of arms, logistic backup and military welfare needs. Little wonder why Eminue, Okon; Ufomba, Henry [3] opines that if all the funds that go into the Nigerian Defence Ministry are judiciously used, by now the country's Defence Ministry would have been one of the most sophisticated in the World.

Paradoxically, terrorism and insecurity have continued to threaten the peaceful existence of the country. Thousands of lives have been lost due to the trend of domestic violence and terrorism in Nigeria. It becomes obvious that there is no corresponding outcome regarding the huge amount of money expended on the military yearly. So far, not less than twenty thousand people, including soldiers, have been killed by the dreaded Boko Haram (BH) sect. The Goodluck Jonathan's administration in an attempt to proffer a lasting solution to the military's incapacitation resulting from lack of modern facilities acquired a loan of $2.1 billion. The aforementioned sum ended up in the pockets of some top military and government officials thereby leaving the Armed Forces in a state of quagmire, without sophisticated weapons, and also causing a preventable loss of many officers who were deployed to fight the BH and dislodge them from the Sambisa forest which is BH's hideout. Thus, this paper is designed to investigate military financial management and the readiness of the Nigerian Armed Forces to combat terrorism in the country. Among other pertinent issues, this paper will consider defence and security votes in Nigeria from 2008 till 2016, the historical perspective of terrorism in Nigeria, problems of defence management in Nigeria and a projection towards an appropriate military financial management in the country.
