14. Chapter 1 of Madame Bovary hints about the characters' lives that reflect Flaubert's understanding of nineteenth-century middle-class society in his province.

- The characters believe themselves to be better off than they are, but including themselves among other people.
- The characters believe themselves to be more of one category or another, although they are actually somewhere in between.

The characters believe themselves to be higher status than they are, but recognize they are not.

The characters believe themselves to be more inferior than they are to someone within the community through education and work.

Madame Bovary's husband, Hippolyte, believes that since he is part of a high social class,

"Napoleon, emperor of France" represents the state in which all other men will be following his path.

At the end of Chapter 2, Flaubert concludes Madame Bovary's thoughts that concern:

- a feeling of her great loneliness.
- a feeling of her own insignificance.
- a feeling of her responsibility.
- a feeling of her own freedom.

Madame Bovary lives a dual life:

• In one, she follows a prescribed path that she must respect. • In another, she lives a secret, and lives her life according to personal standards. • In one, she is a wife and mother, and must look good to her husband and children. • In the other, she is a girl who is trying to be a girl. When Flaubert says all characters, including her, follow her own path and the standards of others, that does not mean that she is not trying to be a girl. Flaubert's secret is that she is not trying to be a girl. Flaubert's secret is that she is not trying to be a girl. Flaubert's secret is that she is not trying to be a girl. Flaubert's secret is that she is not trying to be a girl.

Flaubert's secret is that she is not trying to be a girl. Flaubert's secret is that she is not trying to be a girl.

- to show a woman in a province is "the best of all worlds."
- to provide an early portrait of her "the best of all worlds" life.
- to show women in "provinces" are the best of all worlds.
- to show women in the province are the best of all worlds.

Madame Bovary lives the beginning of a journey that will lead her to a new, more interesting life.

"The best of all worlds" is not just a phrase, but a way of life. It is a way of life that is not just a phrase, but a way of life. It is a way of life that is not just a phrase, but a way of life. It is a way of life that is not just a phrase, but a way of life. It is a way of life that is not just a phrase, but a way of life.

"Flaubert and the province" represents the state in which all other men will be following his path.

"Flaubert and the province" represents the state in which all other men will be following his path.
