

The Great Gatsby Paper

In passage A the reader is introduced to the heat of the novel "Already it was deep summer" this heightens the tension by the imagery of a "deep summer" because deep and summer is not usually words that are associated with each other. This is perhaps to prepare the readers for the entrance of Gatsby. Weather is a theme throughout the novel. This is shown in chapter 7 where the weather conditions were extreme "warmest of the summer" and is used here to heighten tension. Then the passage goes on to comment on the "new red gas-pumps sat out in pools of light" which is reference to the American dream by showing "pools of light" which illustrates the hope there was that was there for it to succeed and the ultimate failure of it because it was materialistically surrounded by "new" things i. e.

... regarding the silver pepper of the stars" the pepper and stars are unusually associated and also give a good image of the stars being sprinkled on the night sky which is explored with the theme of light and darkness seen in this passage. The quote also shows Gatsby to be a man who has high aspirations which is also conveyed in the next sentence "come out to determine what share was his of the local heavens" This is explained later in the novel when you are told of Daisy's old house which had the "brought luxury of star shine" which is reflective of the way Gatsby tries to imitate Daisy's lucrative ways so as to make himself attractive to her. This is also showing that he believes that he could own the stars which is showing how extreme Gatsby is and how fragile his dream really is because he won't be able really ever to own the stars or eventually never Daisy.

Gatsby is then seen by Nick to have "stretched out his arms towards the dark water" due to wanting to reach towards Daisy but you only find this out later in the novel. This shows how pathetic his attempt at reaching for Daisy is because he will never rea
