Review Questions Answer Key

Cancer

1. Question: A 70-year-old patient indicates that she recalls both of her parents sustained breast cancer at a young family history of breast cancer. Her mother developed breast cancer at age 47 and died of that disease at age 70. Her father died in some form of breast cancer at age 64. The patient has two young daughters and does not want to risk dying before her children grow up. What advice should the nurse give her?

Answer: This woman does have a significant family history of breast cancer and may have a breast cancer antigen (BRCA) gene mutation. If appropriate, the nurse should provide information on how the patient and her sister could be tested for the BRCA gene. If the test is positive, further genetic consultation is required. It is important to inform the BRCA-negative patient that her risk is still similar to that of the general public.

2. Question: A 40-year-old patient is concerned about the radiation exposure risk associated with mammography. She would like to undergo breast radiography instead. What advice should the nurse give her?

Answer: Mammography is an X-ray examination of the breast that is performed with exposure to approximately 0.7 rad of radiation per view. Radiography involves an injection of an intravenous contrast dye and the use of a gamma ray radiography camera to pass over the breasts and record radioactive uptake or "hot" or "cold" spots. Because the amount of radioactive used in radiography is small, there is a relatively low risk of radiation exposure. However, mammography has an even lower risk of radiation exposure than radiography.

3. Question: During a routine evaluation, a patient is found to have a suspect lesion on mammography. Her physical examination results are negative, and she has no palpable masses. Should a biopsy of this mass be performed?

Answer: Mammography can be used to locate a mammographically identified (i.e., non-palpable) breast lesion. Further testing is required. It is important to inform the patient that further testing is not necessary after a mammograph. If the radiologist sees something that should be more thoroughly evaluated with magnified views, spot views, or ultrasonography, the patient may be called back for further testing prior to performing a biopsy.
