

Topic 1 The atmosphere

Introduction

Almost all life on Earth and all processes of the atmosphere depend on energy from the Sun. The Sun emits this energy into space, radiating it in all directions. The Earth, about 150 million kilometres away, receives only a small part of this energy. The Sun's energy heats the Earth's atmosphere unevenly and produces pressure differences between the tropics and the polar regions. These differences cause winds and ocean currents. Our familiar daily and seasonal temperature variations are due to changes in the balance between the amount of incoming radiation from the Sun and the amount of outgoing radiation from the Earth.

Unit 1 The Earth's energy balance

1 What are the effects of unequal heating on the Earth's energy balance?

Incoming radiation from the Sun is mostly higher energy, short wave radiation that heats the Earth's surface. The heated Earth radiates lower energy, long wave, infrared energy back into the atmosphere. This heats the atmosphere.
