HYDROSTATIC TRANSMISSION OPERATION

- Pump shaft (1), which drives cylinder barrel is rotated by the engine.
 - Moving the positioning piston (2) to the rear position, an angle is fixed between pistons and swash plate (3), which pistons are controlled, this angle will create a volume of forces in one side smaller and in the other side bigger. In this way it is created an oil pressure difference area (hydraulic power) through hydraulic motor (pipe A on diagram) and a suction area from hydraulic motor (pipe B on diagram).
 - The oil goes from pump to motor (pipe A), pressing on pistons, will move pistons and consequently the output shaft (10), transforming hydraulic power into mechanical power.
 - The oil transferring power is returned through pipe (B) to hydraulic pump's suction port (to be reused).
 - This is the closed circuit arrangement, therefore, unless there again the same oil quantity.
- NOTE: Moving the positioning piston in the other direction, it will create the reversed direction of engine rotation.
- Oil leakage between bearing parts, seals, during machine's life, the applying of closed circuit, the trouble is solved applying a gear pump (8) named loading pump, which sucks oil from the hydraulic tank and introducing it into the closed circuit keeping inside constant pressure, checked by a fixed setting main relief valve (9).
 - Failure prevented all of the bearings/seals used for positioning piston (2) operation which allows the operator variable inclination of the swash plate and therefore the hydraulic motor speed.
 - All the system is protected from pressure peaks (and therefore from overloads) by safety valves (7).
