

Much of what you learn in M1 is technique – how to solve problems and how to tackle A level questions. Success in any technique comes with practice, so try as many questions from A level papers as you can – practice, practice, practice,...

These answers on their own won't get you full marks. Indeed you get most of your marks for showing good clear working following the principles of Mechanics that you have learned.

Use these answers to check your working. If you get the right answer then you have probably used the right thinking, and if you lay your working out clearly you should get full marks. If you don't get the right answer, look carefully for your mistake – that in itself is a valuable learning exercise. If you still cannot find your mistake, talk it over with your colleagues and/or ask your teacher – who will be happy to help you out!
