FOR GAME BIRD AND SMALL POULTRY FLOCK OWNERS

Five major functions are involved in the incubation and hatching of game bird and chicken eggs. The five functions are temperature, humidity, ventilation, egg turning, and sanitation.

The major topics below are explained in detail in the text.

- Hatching Temperature
- Humidity in Incubators and Hatchers
- Ventilation
- Egg Turning
- Hatchery Sanitation

Each of the five functions is important and may individually cause havoc in your attempt to hatch eggs if one is not conducted properly. When two or more are not controlled, it may be a disaster. Keep in mind, that changing or adjusting one of these functions may affect other functions and cause them to need adjustment as well. Therefore, changes in any one function should be made gradually and all functions should be watched closely for needed readjustment.

HATCHING TEMPERATURE

Most of the large commercial type incubators and hatchers are run at 99°F. On the other hand, most of the smaller incubators and hatchers, like those commonly used by game bird producers, are run at 100°F.

Temperature is the easiest hatching function to regulate, provided you have a good set of controls to work with and provided you check the heating mechanism regularly. Without good, sensitive, easy-to-regulate, and dependable temperature controls, you can have low hatches, poor quality chicks, and you can sometimes lose the entire hatch. If your incubators and hatches are large enough to justify doing so, you should install a temperature sensitive alarm to warn you of the potential danger to the developing embryos.

Temperature alarms are usually constructed of two temperature sensors. One is set to activate the alarm if the temperature drops below 97 or 98°F. The other sensor is set to activate the alarm if the temperature goes above 102°F. This is a simple explanation of the temperature alarm and how it is installed, but even so, it is not all that difficult to install. If
