

It is a technique of ploughing using a tractor. It saves time and labour.

Sowing

•The process of scattering seeds in the soil for growing the crop plants is called sowing. The seeds of the crop are sown in soil once it is prepared by ploughing, leveling, and manuring. Before sowing, good quality, clean and healthy seeds of high yields are selected.

Note: Seeds are sown in the soil either by hand or by seed drill (driven by tractor).

The advantages of sowing seeds with the seed drills are:

- This sows the seeds uniformly at correct depth and intervals. This allows plants to get sufficient sunlight, water, and nutrients from the soil.
- It ensures that seeds get covered by the soil after sowing. This protects seeds from being eaten by the birds.
- Sowing by using seed drills also saves time and labor.

Note: Some crops like paddy (rice) and vegetables like tomatoes and chilies seeds are not sown directly in the soil. These seeds are first sown in a small plot or nursery and are allowed to grow into tiny plants called seedlings. These seedlings are then picked out and transplanted to the main field. This process is called transplanting or transplantation.
