

Self-Reflection of Leadership

The four universal principles that I adhere to are to be self-motivated, integrity, lead by example and encourage and motivate others. The fundamental characteristics that I have represents the person that I am by how I was raised based on the morals and values that were instilled in me by my family and church members. These factors are important when going into a leadership position, most people will respect and follow a person that will lead by example. If a leader expects their employee or followers to do a certain assignment or task, then that leader should lead by example and be able to complete the assignment or task that was delegated. Also, if the leader expects the employees to have integrity and to be honest then the leader should adhere to their own request. Integrity is described implementing principles of honesty and morals and values that you be in that believe in taking responsibility of doing the right thing. as Self-motivation is a characteristic that is described as believing in yourself and not having to get that encouragement from no one else, you must be your own cheerleader. Encouraging and motivating others is very important to me because some people are just not motivated, and they may need some help pushing themselves to achieve certain goals that have been set. If I see one of my colleagues that need that extra boost of motivation and encouragement, I jump at the chance to assist in that aspect. I have noticed that some people have a hard time to be self-motivated and to see the values that they have within. In these circumstances I tend to put a lot of myself in other issues by trying to encourage and motivate them to a higher level of expectation than they require of themselves. A good example of this is when a classmate of mine was pursuing a certification and was only focused on finishing with the minimum grade to receive the certification and I pushed her to a higher level of achieving with a higher grade by encouraging and motivating her to go past her expectations to exceed with excellence.

My core values are loyalty, religion, respect, and responsibility. These characteristics describe how I operate daily, I tend to value all these values on how I treat others in my workplace, and it tends to make me have a wonder day most of the time. Loyalty is how I approach my work ethic and to go to work and do the best job that I can do in my power. I try to give a 100% daily and I hope that my effort is being noticed. The
