

The Seven Life Processes

All living things carry out these processes in order to survive.

M ovement	Living things can move on their own. Plants seem like they don't move, but do face their leaves towards the sun in order to photosynthesise.
R espiration	Living things carry out cellular respiration: tiny chemical reactions inside their cells. The reactions for animals use oxygen, and plants use carbon dioxide or oxygen depending on if it's dark or light.
S ensitivity	Living things respond to environmental stimuli like touch and heat, and internal stimuli like pain. This helps keep them safe from dangers and regulate their internal temperature.
G rowth	Living things continuously make new cells, which make them larger as they grow from babies into adults and then replace old or dying cells.
R eproduction	Living things make new baby living things. For example, plants produce seeds which germinate to make new plants, and animals lay eggs or give birth to the young. Some organisms like bacteria simply divide in half to increase their offspring.
N utrition	Living things obtain the raw materials and energy from the environment. Plants take their raw materials from the ground and photosynthesise. Animals take their raw materials from the ground or the plants they eat.
R esponse	Living things react to what is around them and use these responses to other processes such as growth. This living thing got the nutrients from the environment but plants take their raw materials from the ground or photosynthesise.
