Evidence of Hereditary Material

Background Information

In the 1950s, Frederick Griffith, an English bacterial physiologist, was experimenting with Streptococcus pneumoniae. The bacterium, which appears as smooth cocci in the lungs, can have a surrounding polysaccharide capsule and a chromosome that is hereditary. Griffith showed that bacteria were transformable. His second bacterial function, an ability not to be killed by heat, became known as a virulent factor (Figure 1).

nonvirulent cells (R form)

The following is an abbreviated summary of Griffith's procedure and results:

1. Mice that were injected with nonvirulent cells (R form) with heat-killed Streptococcus did not become ill (Figure 2).

Observation

Mice that were injected with living cells of nonvirulent form in the lungs did not succumb and appeared to be healthy (see Table). The purpose of using living cells was to ensure that mice and that they were given the same

- a) What conditions were given bacteria upon being heated?
- b) Why might a scientist decide to repeat the same experiment under nonstandard conditions?
- c) How would it have been procedurally correct to include a third control experiment (Figure 3)?

Observation

Mice that were injected with mice that had succumbed to the disease revealed that the living Streptococcus found in the lungs were:

- a) What other organisms are in the lungs?
- b) Predict what conditions happened to the smooth, the nonvirulent (R form) cells that were heated and then injected. What would the results represent in the experimental process?

Exploring Physical Anthropology is a comprehensive full color lab manual intended for an introductory laboratory course in physical anthropology. It can also serve as a supplementary workbook for a lecture class particularly in the absence of a laboratory offering. This laboratory manual enables a hands on approach to learning about the evolutionary processes that resulted in humans through the use of numerous examples and exercises. It offers a solid grounding in the main areas of an introductory physical anthropology lab course: genetics, evolutionary forces, human osteology, forensic anthropology, comparative functional skeletal anatomy, primate behavior, paleoanthropology, and modern human biological variation.

Laboratory Exercises in Genetics Louis Levine, Norman M. Schwartz, 1973. Toxicological Profile for 2,4,6-trinitrotoluene, 1995. Life in the Universe Monica M. Grady, 2008. The theme of this book is life in the Universe, focusing on two questions: How did life begin on Earth? Is there life elsewhere in the Universe? In an attempt to find the answers to these questions, this book explores the origin and early evolution of the Earth and explains why this is not only of interest in itself but also guides the search for life beyond the Earth. It looks at the rest of the Solar System to see whether any other planets or their satellites have life on them today or have supported life in the past It looks beyond the Solar System at the evidence for planets around other stars and how life may be discovered should it exist on these extrasolar planets and briefly at the search for extraterrestrial intelligence SETI Life (Loose Leaf) David E.
