

INDEX FOSSILS

Index Fossils Lab

Background Information

Index fossils are the fossil remains from the past. They are the remains of ancient life that lived millions of years ago and can tell us a great deal about the history of our planet. These fossils are used by scientists to date rocks and sediment layers, and to piece together the evolutionary history of different species.

Imagine taking a journey back in time. It is now 65 million years ago. You would discover a world of strange creatures that are long extinct, such as dinosaurs, mammoths, and dinosaurs. These creatures have left behind their remains, which we now call index fossils.

Index fossils are species that lived during a specific period of time and had a widespread distribution. This means that they are found in different rocks and sediment layers, because they grew up in other locations of the globe in which they are found. For example, if a rock layer contains the fossil of a trilobite that is only known to have lived between 400 and 300 million years ago, we can confidently say that the rock is around that age.

The use of index fossils has revolutionized the field of geology and paleontology, allowing scientists to create detailed timelines of Earth's history. By studying the fossil record of different species, they have been able to piece together the evolutionary history of our planet and how life has changed over time.

But index fossils aren't just useful for scientists - they're also fascinating in their own right. Each fossil tells a unique story about the animal that left it behind, and the environment in which it lived. Some fossils show evidence of ancient ecosystems, like tropical forests, while others reveal the harsh conditions of the past.

4. Complete your sketch of the container you identified with the sketch made by the members of that container. Explain the similarities and the differences.

Similarities	Differences

5. How do scientists use an index fossil to figure out the age of other fossils found nearby?

6. Research an index fossil found in your state. Why was the fossil an important discovery? What do it teach scientists about your state's history?
