whatever your virtues you are extremely clever and I like your mind and your conversation and your eyes Darcy trailed off Elizabeth could not help but blush at his evident admiration of her He continued in a firmer tone I require of myself a wife with the highest connections the cleanest and most sterling reputation and the further I am determined that she ought be near twenty years of age and I think you to be much past that Zounds Forget being refused have you ever been slapped Elizabeth grinned at Mr Darcy most amused by his pique You do not take to rejection kindly Mr Darcy winced Miss Bennet allow me to apologize I hardly know what I said I certainly did not mean to say such and No no no I despise pretense And I adore ridiculousness But your pomposity you are clever enough to perhaps improve But this shall go deep in my stores of memories But I forgive you this for your kindness earlier this evening You sir were very kind and I would be the worst sort of woman if I in turn savaged you Mr Darcy shook his head Even though you consider me vain and ridiculous Merely vain I know my deficits I am as you perceived seven and twenty without a sterling reputation and my connections are more to trade than nobility So there is nothing to be done for it No matter how much you like my eyes Mr Darcy flushed but also smiled No matter how much I admire your superior estate and your person we can never make a match of it All that is left is to be friends
