

MANUAL DATABASE VS. COMPUTERIZED DATABASE

Manual Database	Computerized Database
Manual database is the record keeping systems in which human being manage the whole database without the support of computers.	Computerized database is a database that can be managed or accessed by computers.
A Manual database is like a filing cabinet and is very slow and clumsy at organizing information.	A Computerized database is stored in a computer and is very fast at organizing information, and grouping related data.
In a manual database system, information must be found by hand rather than electronically. Someone looking for information in a manual database may have to spend hours searching for a particular piece of data, which is a very time consuming job.	A Computerized database will typically allow users to search the entire database for specific information in seconds.

Less Reliable.
