

The Engineering Entrepreneurship Survey: An Assessment Instrument to Examine Engineering Student Involvement in Entrepreneurship Education

Nathalie Duval-Couetil*, Teri Reed-Rhoads, and Shiva Haghghi

Abstract - This paper describes the Engineering Entrepreneurship Survey (EES), an assessment instrument designed to examine engineering student involvement in entrepreneurship education and related outcomes. It was developed as part of an NSF-funded study "Entrepreneurship Education and its Impact on Engineering Student Outcomes: The Role of Program Characteristics and Faculty Beliefs." It has been used successfully over the past two years to gather data from senior-level students at multiple institutions that have entrepreneurship courses or programs that are available to engineers. The 135-item survey examines: 1) engineering student attitudes towards entrepreneurship, 2) engagement in entrepreneurial activities and behaviors, 3) knowledge of entrepreneurship-related terms and concepts, 4) entrepreneurial self-efficacy, 5) student perceptions of engineering faculty attitudes toward entrepreneurship. Item categories and subscales show high reliability. The validated survey collects baseline data that can be valuable in program development and evaluation.

1. Introduction

Entrepreneurship courses and programs may be one of the fastest growing curricular areas within engineering schools. Economic realities such as global competition, downsizing, decentralization, re-engineering, mergers, and new technologies have made career paths more complex and uncertain for graduates in all sectors (Gibb, 1996). In this new environment, it is widely accepted that entrepreneurial ventures are key to innovation and economic growth. Therefore, students who are able to identify opportunities, understand market forces, commercialize new products, communicate, and lead teams, in addition to having strong science and technical skills, are likely to have more value in the marketplace for jobs. To meet this need, colleges of engineering are increasingly developing entrepreneurship courses and/or are making those offered through business schools or multidisciplinary programs accessible to their students. This movement has garnered support from influential publications and professional organizations such as the National Academy of Engineering (NAE) and the American Society for Engineering Education (ASEE) (Dabbagh and Menascé, 2006; Rover, 2005).

The characteristics of entrepreneurship programs offered to engineers can vary widely as do the beliefs and practices of the faculty who teach them. A multi-institution, NSF-funded study, Entrepreneurship Education and its Impact on Engineering Student Outcomes: The Role of Program Characteristics and Faculty Beliefs, was undertaken to address how these factors influence student outcomes. The purpose of the study was to explore the relationship between
