Writing Samples

Always have one ready and bring one with you to every interview. If your sample was prepared in conjunction with a course, make sure it is reprinted so that written instructor comments are not included in the copy submitted to employers. If you are using a writing sample developed during employment, obtain your employer's permission to use it. Be sure that the names of the parties and any other identifying information are removed. Eight to ten pages is an ideal length. Twelve pages is the upper limit. If you use a section of a brief, use a cover sheet to explain. Make sure there are no typos anywhere in your writing sample. It is unethical to submit a writing sample that incorporates significant revisions by a professor, judge, co-worker, or tutor. However, if you have edited a writing sample in response to a professor's or supervisor's comments, that is fine. Writing samples must contain only your own writing. This does not mean you must submit a first draft. Law journal articles are not recommended because they are usually heavily edited by someone else and are too long.

In selecting a writing sample to provide to employers, follow our top ten tips:

1. Legal-Make sure your writing sample highlights your legal reasoning and analytical skills. For many students, a sample from your legal writing course, advocacy, or work you completed for a legal employer will be your best options.
2. Confidentiality-If you use a sample from an employer or externship, you must ask permission before using the sample and redact any confidential information, such as the party names.
3. Length & Cover Sheet-Follow any guidelines the employer provides for the length (do not exceed the page limit). If no guidelines are provided, generally eight to twelve pages is appropriate. Ideally, provide an entire product (memo, brief, etc.). If you cannot provide an entire document due to length requirements, provide a portion of a memo or brief e.g. the introduction and analysis section so they can see your legal reasoning. Always include a cover sheet that includes your name, address, email address, and a short description of the issue or issues as follows:
