

MAXIM High-Frequency Waveform Generator

MAX9339

General Description

The MAX9339 is a high-frequency, precision, self-contained waveform generator designed to provide high-frequency (MHz) sine, square, pulse, and pulse-width modulated (PWM) waveforms. The MAX9339 can be configured over an operating range of 1 kHz to 200MHz for an internal 3.3V supply or using a reference and an external voltage and frequency. The MAX9339 can be used over a wide range by providing a 1.2V_{PP} square wave, frequency pulse-width modulated (PWM) and the generation of a square wave at 10, 100, 1000, 10000, and frequency ranging up to 100MHz in the same way. The duty cycle and frequency conditions are independent.

Wave square or triangle waveforms can be created in the output by setting the appropriate value of the TTL-compatible control pins. The output signal can be inverted by a 200MHz signal source and ground signal source. The non-inverting or output can drive up to 50pF load.

The TTL-compatible control signal from the internal pulse generator is used, duty cycle—dependent on the duty cycle of the input signal—on functions other than sine in the system. The internal pulse can be configured to an external TTL input (external 100MHz).
