

Activity 3: A Visit to Fouria

- PURPOSE Use a game to reinforce place-value concepts, to introduce the base-four numeration system, and to develop understanding of the regrouping process.
- MATERIALS Other: Blue, red, and white chips (10 of each color) and a die
- GROUPING Work in pairs.
- GETTING STARTED While on an Intergalactic Numismatics Tour you encounter a meteor shower and are forced to make an unscheduled stop on the planet Fouria. The monetary system used on Fouria consists of three coins: a white coin (worth $1 in U.S. money), a red coin, and a blue coin. The red coin is equivalent in value to four white coins, and the blue coin is equivalent to four red coins.

1. Unlike its sister planet, Ufouria, Fouria turns out to be a rather dull place to visit. To help pass the time in the waiting area, you and a fellow passenger play a coin trading game. The rules of the game are:

- Players alternate turns.
- On each turn, a player rolls the die and places that number of white Fourian coins in the white column on his or her Coin Trading Game Sheet.
- Whenever possible, a player must trade four white coins for one red coin and/or four red coins for one blue coin.
- Coins must be placed in the appropriately labeled column. No more than three coins of one color may be in any column at the end of a turn.
- The first player to get two blue coins is the winner.

Make a Coin Trading Game Sheet, and play the game with a partner. At the end of each turn, record the number of each color coin on your game sheet in a table like the one at the right.
