

virtually erased, the question of how to control and maintain a set of behaviors according to an acceptable standard became an imperative. But as how to do it still remains the questions; of whether a big government should intervene or the industry itself should regulate and police themselves.

This brings to mind the geographic relativity of laws. For example, laws governing e-commerce and speech in the United States may differ or may not even exist say that of the Middle East country and vice versa that the enforcement of cyberspace regulation may prove to be a challenge if not impossible to implement. Such, many concerned parties proposed to set an intergovernmental regulation to create a cross-border harmonization of internet governance policy for greater efficacy.

There is however other interest groups that espouse the idea of self-imposed regulation of cyberspace conduct. Among these is the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) in the United States whose mandate is to develop a bottom-up consensus on the usage of the internet among the private sector. Though it differed in identity compared to that of the government, it still called for the regulation of the cyberspace by a broader consensus of different interested parties in the private sector.

This meant that even the private sector acknowledges that there has to be a set of acceptable behavior in cyberspace to eliminate misconduct. For consideration and socially acceptable behavior will always be desirable regardless of time, place and medium. To paraphrase Marianne M. Jennings, this only demonstrates that even if the medium of communication and business advances, the basic principles of ethics, such as honesty, fairness,
