The primary aim in this study has been to present a substantial analytical information base to support future work on the NAP This information base was designed to provide an understanding of the relationships between existing aerodromes and the communities they currently serve irrespective of the specific forces which produced the past and current aerodrome developments It has been assumed that these forces have resulted at least in an aggregate sense in a rational provision of aerodrome facilities and air services in terms of balancing community desires with available resources Every attempt has been made to make this information base as robust as possible and to allow it to be adapted to changing circumstances In this study no attempt has been made to allow for higher or lower community expectations in relation to the provision of air services and the aerodromes required to support those services Furthermore it was not considered appropriate to examine alternative government policies relating to aerodrome provision Three different but interrelated aspects of aerodromes in Australia were examined in the development of the strategic framework the demand for aviation services the demand for aerodrome facilities to support the aviation services and the costs of providing these facilities Contents Characteristics of aerodromes asministration and operations Patterns of aviation activity and air services Demand for aviation services Physical characteristics of aerodromes Relationship between aerodrome quality and regional characteristics Cost estimates for aerodrome planning Aviation costs Air transport Airport facilities The United States Catalog ,1965 Caterer & Hotelkeeper ,1992-06
