Martin Firecat Pro-X

Gail and Eva Martin founded Martin Archery in 1951. As with many companies they started out small and slowly increased their position in the market year by year. Today, Martin Archery is a large bow manufacturer with sales that stretch around the globe. Gail and Eva are still heavily involved with day-to-day operations while their son Terry and his son, Ryan drive the business into the future with new technology and processes.

The new Firecat heads Martin's 2008 line of bows. The Firecat is a super maneuverable bow that is lightweight, fast and quiet. A new hybrid cam system is advertised to generate scorching speeds while the shot is tamed by a host of shock and noise reducing components and features including parallel limbs, Bowflox string silencers, Sims Limb Savers and Martin's own integrated V.E.M. silencing system. Many other design characteristics round out the package that will be reviewed in detail on the following pages.

The Basics:

Riser: Martin forms their Firecat riser to achieve a 2.85 inch reflex geometry, which effectively increases the power stroke supplied by the archer and in turn the resultant speed of the arrow. As with most top-of-the-line bows on the market the Firecat riser is CNC machined from lightweight 6061-T6 aluminum. However, there are differences with Martin's riser design as well in that rather than being a single machined component it is modular. Three separate pieces are assembled to create the overall Firecat riser. The two interface/connecting surfaces for the modular riser are located at the top of the sight window and in the shelf area. A series of bolts and precision-polished stainless steel pins secure these connections.

The Firecat has a relatively low mass weight of only 3.6 pounds, which is achieved, in part, through multiple cutouts and pockets on the riser and a unique limb-to-riser connection that will be discussed in more detail in the next section.

Martin features the Thermal V Grip on the Firecat. This grip is made with the same Omega V Vibration Escape material that their silencing modules are made from. A thin piece of leather-like material is wrapped around the heel of the grip and covered by the one-piece Vibration Escape portion of the grip that is contoured, ribbed and shaped for comfort. The grip is held in place with an adhesive.

Martin has a series of lock-mount arrow rests available that have a two-pronged mounting system. The two prongs/legs of the mounting plate fits into a U-shaped pocket on the riser. This interlocking system mounts the arrow rest in such a way that it will not move after it has been tightened down. It eliminates the Martin's new Firecat Pro-X is part of a very strong dealer-only Pro Series from the veteran Washington bow-builder. Modular riser construction helps Martin give this top-end hunting model a suggested retail price of $599.
