Taking a Breath

A sea turtle spends most of its life in the ocean.

However, it can't breathe underwater.

Instead, it comes to the surface to take a deep breath about every five minutes.

A turtle can hold its breath for much longer than that, though.

As it sleeps on the sea floor, it does not breathe for several hours.

There are about 200 kinds of turtles. Most of them live on land or in freshwater, such as ponds and lakes. However, some turtles, including green sea turtles, live in the ocean.
