OPENING PHOTOS AND PROFILE

All chapters open with photos of educators. Chapter 1 opens with a photo of my wife, Lil, pointing to many circular images of the Sun beneath a tree in front of our residence in St. Petersburg, Florida. The second photo is of my young protégé Einstein Dhayal from India (right) with his friends telling time with solar shadows. The third photo is of my friend and science writer Judith Brand who assisted in the writing of this edition. She shows how lining up a pea with the Moon leads to estimating its distance from Earth. The last photo is of the Vasquez family, all teachers, that begin with Phyllis Vasquez, colleague at City College of San Francisco (CCSF), and her sons in order of age from oldest to youngest: Michael, David, Rodney, John, and Robert, who all took my class. The question suggested by the photo is how many Moons away from Earth is the Moon? This leads to a very nice Moon-Earth activity.

The profile is of Greek mathematician Eratosthenes.

INTRODUCTION

Like many introductions, much of this introductory chapter can be regarded as a personal essay. In my teaching days I didn't discuss Chapter 1. Today I would, due to the high interest in Eratosthenes and his intriguing way of measuring Earth's circumference in about 235 BC. And I would certainly present what I see as a great feature of this edition, the easy-to-do green-pea activity of judging the Moon's distance from Earth, as Judith Brand illustrates.
