Ecological Homeostasis Christopher J. Paradise,A. Malcolm Campbell,2016-04-27 Food webs energy flow indirect effects and nutrient cycling are described as properties that emerge in ecological systems Several of these properties are shown in this book to result from indirect effects and interactions between species and abiotic components of ecological systems For instance top predators affect organisms with which they do not directly interact including plants and non prey animals In some other interactions including competition the nonliving components of ecological systems the abiotica can alter the outcome of a biotic interaction A limiting resource often results in competition but varying environmental conditions allow for species coexistence Finally this book illustrates how energy flows in ecological systems why it is rather inefficient and how species interactions relate to homeostasis and emergent properties In the course of that discussion primary production secondary production and trophic levels are defined Energy flow in ecological systems is tied to the carbon cycle

Trait-mediated Indirect Interactions : Ecological and Evolutionary Perspectives Takayuki Ohgushi, Oswald J. Schmitz, Robert D. Holt, 2012 There is increasing evidence that the structure and functioning of ecological communities and ecosystems are strongly influenced by flexible traits of individuals within species A deep understanding of how trait flexibility alters direct and indirect species interactions is crucial for addressing key issues in basic and applied ecology This book provides an integrated perspective on the ecological and evolutionary consequences of interactions mediated by flexible species traits across a wide range of systems It is the first volume synthesizing the rapidly expanding research field of trait mediated indirect effects and highlights how the conceptual framework of these effects can aid the understanding of evolutionary processes population dynamics community structure and stability and ecosystem function It not only brings out the importance of this emerging field for basic ecological questions but also explores the implications of trait mediated interactions for the conservation of biodiversity and the response of ecosystems to anthropogenic environmental changes Publisher Description

The diversity of the earth s climates superimposed upon a complex configuration of physical features has provided the conditions for the evolution of a remarkable array of living things which are linked together into complex ecosystems The kinds of organisms comprising the ecosystems of the world and the nature of their interactions have constantly changed through time due to coevolutionary interactions along with the effects of a continually changing physical environment In recent evolutionary time there has been a dramatic and ever accelerating rate of change in the configuration of these ecosystems because of the increasing influence of human beings These changes range from subtle modifications caused by anthropogenically induced alterations in atmospheric properties to the total destruction of ecosystems Many of these modifications have provided the fuel food and fiber which have allowed the expansion of human populations Unfortunately there have been many unanticipated changes which accompanied these modifications which have had effects detrimental to human welfare including substantial changes in water and air quality For example the use of high sulfur coal to produce energy in parts of North America is altering the properties of freshwater lakes and forests because of acidification
