

THE UNIVERSE IS A REALLY BIG PLACE

GOALS:

- Gain an intuitive feel for different measures of distance
 - Convert between various units of distance
 - Use scientific notation
 - Understand concepts of the astronomical unit and light year
- Create scale models of solar system and galaxy using a campus map

As we begin our study of life in the universe, you'll find that our universe is indeed a really big place. The distances between planets are unimaginably large, and the distance to the nearest star system is even larger than this. The activities that follow ask you to carefully create several scale models and use them to reason about the size and scale of the universe.

PART A: CONVERTING BETWEEN UNITS

1. Name a location that is about a one hour drive from your present location.
2. Approximately how far away (in miles) is the location you listed above?

Instead of miles, scientists often describe distances in meters (m) and kilometers (km) to better think about distances in the context of astrobiology. Therefore, it will be useful for you to begin to think of distances in these terms.

Using your calculator, you can convert between miles and kilometers using the relationship that 1.609 kilometers = 1 mile. For example:

$$15 \text{ miles} \times \frac{1.609 \text{ km}}{1 \text{ mile}} = 24.135 \text{ km} \text{ or about } 24 \text{ km}$$

Note that we only keep two "significant" figures in the final answer. This is because there were only two figures in the initial value 15 miles. -

3. Calculate the number of kilometers for the distance you estimated in question 2. Clearly show all of your work as in the example calculation above.
4. Name a location that would take about three hours to drive to and estimate the number of kilometers to that location.
5. Current estimates suggest that a liquid ocean may exist about 100 km beneath the icy surface of Jupiter's moon Europa. Give examples of two locations on Earth that are about 100 km apart.
