

RESEARCH CONTRIBUTION STATEMENT

Research Objectives

Dr. Jingji Jin research objectives are to elucidate the molecular and cellular mechanisms underlying human diseases and to develop new preventive and therapeutic measures against human maladies such as Hypertension, Alzheimer's disease and Autism. She is currently using chemical engineering, molecular biology, genetics, neuropathology, cell and animal model systems, and behavioral neuroscience to accomplish her research objectives. She contributes her effort and dedication to decipher the disease mechanisms and finally to put that knowledge to alleviating human sufferings from hypertension et al.

Development of chitosan-polyacrylic acid and chitosan-polymethacrylic acid palladium complex heterogeneous catalysts for safe and economical production of aniline and propionic acid

Aniline and propionic acid are important materials in dye chemical industry. In chemical industries (large scale production), harsh conditions such as extreme high temperatures and pressures have been required to produce aniline and propionic acid from nitrobenzene and ethylene, respectively. Therefore, the production of such chemicals requires expensive apparatuses and can be dangerous. In order to produce aniline and propionic acid safely under a mild condition, Dr. Jin developed novel catalysts called silica-supported palladium complexes of the biopolymers chitosan-polyacrylic acid and/or chitosan-polymethacrylic acid. She succeeded for the first time to produce aniline and propionic acid from nitrobenzene and acrylic acid, respectively, at room temperature under atmospheric pressure using her catalysts. Indeed, she demonstrated that highly pure aniline and propionic acid were produced without any byproducts by use of her catalysts. Moreover, she demonstrated that their high catalytic activity and selectivity are attributed to the special complex structure of palladium bi-polymer by using electron spectroscopy for chemical analysis (ESCA). Her works clearly established a novel way of producing aniline and propionic acid safely and economically. Her works were published in a chemical journal, Reactive polymers, and highly regarded as exemplified by many citations (cited in 20 articles). For examples, her paper was referenced by Journal of Molecular Catalysis A: Chemistry 2007, with title 'Structure and behavior of organopalladium catalysts based on ultrathin chitosan layers'. The importance of her invention was developed in organopalladium catalysis technology.
