Introduction

Malnutrition is a global public health problem. It is a condition in which the body does not have enough nutrients to function properly. Malnutrition can lead to a variety of health problems, including weakened immunity, stunted growth, and increased risk of infection and disease.

The Danish Malnutrition Period 1940-1945

The Danish malnutrition period was a period of severe malnutrition in the 1940s. It was caused by a combination of factors, including food shortages, economic hardship, and the impact of World War II. The period lasted from 1940 to 1945, and it had a significant impact on the health and well-being of the Danish population.

During this period, the Danish population experienced a significant increase in mortality and morbidity. The period was characterized by severe malnutrition, which led to a variety of health problems, including weakened immunity, stunted growth, and increased risk of infection and disease.
