

DX LCD Display, Version 3, DT-9100-8104

Theory of Operation

The DX LCD Display is designed for use with the DX-9100 (Version 2.0 or later) and DX-9121 Series of digital controllers. The display connects directly to the built in RS-232 serial port of the DX controller, allowing easy access to all of the system functions that are available at the user's password level, such as alarm logs and time-schedules. The DX LCD Display is operated through a simple keypad and menu system that provide easy, intuitive access to the data and parameters stored in the DX controller.

The DX LCD Display with firmware starting from Version 3.x, Ordering Code DT-9100-8104, can use an RS-232/RS-485 converter to communicate, via the N2 Bus, with one of up to eight DX-9100 controllers working in standalone mode, that is with no supervisory system monitoring the N2 Bus. A DX LCD Display Unit with an earlier firmware version (2.x) can communicate directly with one DX controller by a direct connection, but not via the N2 Bus.

The DX LCD Display configuration parameters are entered using a personal computer, and configuration software is available from Johnson Controls. Configuration data is downloaded to the display via the computer's serial port and is stored in EEPROM memory, which requires no battery support.

Note: In the remainder of this guide, the DX-9100 and DX-9121 controllers will be referred to simply as "DX controllers."
