1. What purpose does the encounter between Howard and the Dean serve? What concepts and beliefs does the Dean represent?

Like many of the characters in the novel, the Dean has his own set of beliefs, and consequently a set of ideas about his own philosophy or beliefs. When he tells Howard that everything worth building has already been done, the Dean means the buildings that come from adhering too strongly to tradition, instead of creating innovative designs. The Dean looks down the thoughts and beliefs of the postmodernists, which he calls "modern ideas"—an idea that is based on the... (text continues)
