The Cell Cycle - Mitosis

Stages of the Cell Cycle (I - PMAT - C)

Interphase
Interphase has three parts - G₁, S, and G₂. The cell grows during G₁, replicates DNA during S, and prepares for division during G₂.

Prophase
Chromatin condenses into visible chromosomes (represented as nuclear membrane dissolves, centrioles move to opposite sides, spindle fibers begin to form).

Metaphase
Chromosomes line up along the cell. Each chromosome sister chromatids separate to chromosomes.

Anaphase
Sister chromatids are pulled apart. The pieces are moved to opposite sides of the cell and recombine.

Telophase
The chromosomes move into chromatin, & nuclear membranes form around the two sets of chromosomes.

Section 6.2 - The Cell Cycle and Mitosis

Cell Growth

Most cells are very small, between 1-100 µm in diameter. (For comparison, a strand of human hair is 70 µm in width.) Cells are small because they are limited by their surface area to volume ratio. As a cell grows, its volume increases faster than its surface area, and it begins to have difficulty transporting nutrients and waste. By remaining small, cells can manage a more efficient internal transport and communication system that means that when a cell reaches its size limit, it must either stop growing or divide. The process of growing and dividing is known as the cell cycle.

Prokaryotic cells, such as bacteria, divide using binary fission. The parent cell replicates its DNA and then divides into two daughter cells with the same genetic information.

Eukaryotic cells, such as organisms, use mitosis to produce identical daughter cells. During binary fission, the parent cell replicates its DNA and then divides into two daughter cells with the same genetic information.

The purpose of mitosis is to form identical cells. Somatic cells are cells that make up the body of an organism. Mitosis creates the same cells that allow an organism to grow and, in adults, it also creates new cells to replace damaged cells. For example, the skin on your hand is constantly being replaced. For example, the skin on your hand is constantly being replaced.
