Hydrocarbon Nomenclature and Representations

Synopsis

Students are required to study chemical structures and nomenclature of hydrocarbons before a final exam part of organic chemistry. This exam poses the challenge with various ways of representing chemical structures of the same molecule and identification of each molecule.

Organizational objectives

Students need to be able to recognize each molecule without having to draw it, giving up the full name and name of the hydrocarbon with a given structure. They also need to be able to draw the skeletal structure which represents the molecule. For this purpose, you will be given the full name.

Initial structures with names and/or identification

In this lab, you will practice with the full name and skeletal structure and then draw the full structure. Start by looking up the full name and getting a better feeling for how the molecules are named. For that purpose, that also brought into the challenge of figuring out the appropriate name. It is to give the students, named by hydrocarbon, structure and full name.

As students become good for each other

In the knowledge phase, you'll be required to a specific type of the representation of molecules. They are asked to draw the full structure, though, also asked to draw the skeletal structure. It is to give the students, named by hydrocarbon, structure and full name. This is to give the students, named by hydrocarbon, structure and full name. It is to give the students, named by hydrocarbon, structure and full name.
