Analysis vs. Argument

A literary analysis evaluates and examines evidence to answer a question about a literary work.

A literary argument supports claims that evaluate the value or meaning of a literary work.

Rhetoric

the art or skill of speaking or writing formally and effectively especially as a way to persuade or influence people.

A balanced Argument

Aristotle's Rhetorical Triangle

- Purpose is the point of your writing, it is the perspective you are trying to change or communicate .
 - Audience who you reading is towards
 - Speaker to convince your audience why your perspective is correct.

Introduction

ineffective introduction- eliminate the use of "I" and the opinions that accompany it, replace informal language with academic vocabulary and formal language, no clear hook or general information, and the claim statement doesn't reference the title, author, or purpose of the short story to which they're referring.

Effective introduction- establishes the author credibility, interesting information which may be news to their audience, and that also connects to their claim, use of academic language and a formal tone makes them seem knowledgeable.

Hook: is the opening statement and a specific example or story that interests the reader and introduces the topic. A good way of catching your reader's attention is by sharing a story that sets up your paper

Julius Caesar

The main themes of the play are ambition and power, friendship, and honor.
