Uniform Trade List Annual, 1977      Incremental Algorithms for General Purpose Layout System Myong Heon Cynn, 1994 Abstract General Purpose Layout System GPLS is proposed as a bidirectional layout conversion system GPLS can translate layout to stick diagram stick diagram to layout layout to layout mixed input to layout To achieve these goals the input format should accept both layout and stick diagram The corner stitch data structure is used to represent the unified input and output A new algorithm for area updating of the corner stitch data structure is presented using non recursive area enumeration The system consists of three stages node extraction constraint generation and resolution As a result the system can be used to apply the new design rules to the existing layouts and to extract the stick diagram from the final layout as well as to translate the stick diagram into the final layout Incremental Layout System is proposed to utilize the previous calculation results for the minor changes in design cycles In order to limit the search space the plane generation algorithm is presented Each stage of GPLS includes incremental algorithms The incremental approach takes advantage of the maximal horizontal property of the data structure to generate the necessary constraint graph
