

Low Self-Esteem In Teens

Low self-esteem is when someone looks at themselves in a negative way. This doesn't just happen teens don't just hate themselves for no reason, the something that they experienced that is making them feel that way about themselves. Once formed, this negative view permeates every thought, producing faulty assumptions and ongoing self-defeating behavior. In high school there is a rising epidemic with low self-esteem with teens. Over 70% of girls in high school avoid normal daily activities, such as attending school, when they have a low self-esteem about their appearance. This can cause teen to miss out on high school experiences.

Low self-esteem can cause teens to make negative and destructive decisions like drinking, smoking, bullying, cutting, and irregular eating habits. Studies show that 75% of teen girls that have low self-esteem issue have engaged in at least one of these activities. Low self-esteem can lead to depression with that being said 20% of teens experience depression before even becoming an adult. Another study reported that 7 in 10 girls feel like they aren't enough or measure up to expectations in some way, whatever the reason may be (looks, grades, relationships, etc.). 38% of boys have tried some type of supplement and 6% have tried steroids in high school or middle school to improve their overall appearance.

Believe it or not your home life can have a major effect on your self-esteem. It doesn't start at school it start where you live and grew up. You probably wouldn't have thought this would be a factor in the epidemic but it actually is. It easy to overlook that the problem could start with the parents the people who have been there for them since day one but it actual fairly common. Having disapproving authority figures can cause a lot of stress and lack of self-esteem. If you were criticized no matter what you did or how hard you tried, it becomes difficult to feel confident and comfortable in your own skin.

Having parents that out always busy and don't seem to have enough time for you, can make you feel very low of yourself. It had to have motivation when your parent act as if you are not worth showing up for. When teens have lack of support it make them feel abandoned and if nobody cares for them. It also show them that they aren't worth your time and then begin to feel worthless and maybe even depressed.

If parents are in conflict it can be difficult for your child to find support. Children pick up on the negative emotion they see at home and it adds to the already lowered self-esteem from the child being bullied and the stress they may be going through at school. This may also occur when a child's parents or hysterical and unpredictable. A child shouldn't have to worry about the parent being there for them, they should just expect it and receive the emotional support they need no questions asked. Often in situations like these the child will begin to blame themselves for their paren
