

Chapter Three: Basic Principles of Chemistry

EXERCISES AND PROBLEMS

Problem 3.1

1. What does Mendeleev's periodicity law state? How is it related to the periodic table?
Mendeleev's periodicity law states that the properties of the elements are a periodic function of their atomic weights. This law is related to the periodic table because the elements are arranged in order of increasing atomic weight, and the periodicity of their properties is observed. Mendeleev's periodicity law is a generalization of the periodicity of the elements, and it is related to the periodic table because the elements are arranged in order of increasing atomic weight, and the periodicity of their properties is observed.
2. What is the periodic table? How is it related to the periodicity law?
The periodic table is a table of the elements, arranged in order of increasing atomic weight, and the periodicity of their properties is observed. The periodicity law states that the properties of the elements are a periodic function of their atomic weights, and this is reflected in the periodic table.
