The first humans who lived in North America and present-day Mississippi were hunters. Archaeologists (ar-kee-oh-lah-jee-oh) believe their humans came from the continent of Asia. They entered North America by traveling across the Bering Land Bridge during the Ice Age. This was a time in history when North America was covered with glaciers (GLAY-ee-oh).

The Bering Land Bridge was actually a strip of ice that was 1,000 miles wide. It connected northeast Asia to western Alaska thousands of years ago. Wild animals crossed back and forth over the Bering Land Bridge. Humans followed the animals into North America. When the ice melted, the frozen bridge disappeared. The water raised the level of the sea. Hunters had no way of getting back to Asia. They continued tracking wild animals throughout North America. Some of these people may have settled in Mississippi.

Until the early 1500s, Native Americans were the only groups of people living in Mississippi. In fact, the only people living in all of North America were Native Americans.

In the 1500s, things began to change for Native Americans throughout North America. They were visited by people they had never met before.

Who were these people and what did they want? To answer these questions, we must first travel back in time to the continent of South America.

The Inca Empire

The Inca people were farmers who once ruled one of the largest and richest empires along the western coast of South America. They gained this huge territory by using their strong and powerful army of warriors to conquer Native American tribes throughout South America. There were at least five million people living in the Inca Empire before the arrival of Spanish explorers.

The huge Inca Empire was connected by more than 25,000 miles of paved roads. Their wealth was displayed in the gold-covered walls of their ruler's palace.
