Abstract - This article gives information about the writing method of Afghan-born American writer Khaled Hosseini, moreover, discusses the human relations and their importance in the society through his novel “The Kite Runner”. The reasonable contrast between two Afghan ethnic groups Hazara and Pashtun stands alone in the work and this phenomenon can demonstrate the country’s forever customs and traditions. Hosseini as a representative of his nation’s culture and history can fulfill his task successfully considering the acceptable consumption of real, factual, historical and fictional information. The relationship among a reader, the writer and the main characters makes invisible imaginary triangulation while accepting inborn humanistic qualities one asks himself/herself the same question “Who is guilty?” for the fate of the poor country Afghanistan. The writer’s talent lies on his clear cognition that the children who do not possess childhood, the women who cannot feel feminine, the men who never sleeps in peace and the country where a heap of ruins spread, all these unfortunate continuous pictures, are in a hurry and do not know how to stop, where to stop and when to stop. The major theme of the novel is the celebration of humanism/human relations in the bombing country. Hosseini through his main personages Amir, Hassan and Baba can point out that Afghan people are heroes in their blood, and it is shame to blame them for the actions happening in their land.

The history never forgets the tragic events of September 11, 2001 that destroyed the pure understanding of Islamic belief and fanned the notion of terrorism. Since then readers from all over the world search for information related to Islam, terrorism and conflicts in the Middle East. Afghanistan and its population are wrongly accused for the accidents causing bombs by terrorists or other authorities in any part of the world. These innocent guilty people are still paying for the destructive actions happening with their awful conditions and terrified destiny. In reality the inhabitants of this poor country want the peace land and the blue sky more than others do. After the publications of several documentaries on the Taliban, Osama Bin Laden and women’s rights in the region, Afghan-born American author Khaled Hosseini stepped onto the fictional world and in 2003 published his first novel “The Kite Runner” in which the writer managed to depict the real life of his people. After the breakthrough of the book among readers, Hosseini created the next two successful fictions “A Thousand Splendid Suns” and “And the Mountains Echoed” referring to Afghan culture, traditions and manners. All three novels have celebrated the true human relations observing the society from different angles and the author’s major assistant in fulfilling this honorable task to represent the tales he heard and events he witnessed.

Khaled Hosseini was born in 1965 in Kabul and his parents were educated people, his mother taught Farsi and history at a girls’ high school and his father was a diplomat for Afghanistan’s Foreign Ministry. The family moved to Tehran and Paris where father Hosseini conducted his mission. In 1980 they left Paris for a new beginning in San Jose, California, being aware that they might never return to their motherland Afghanistan. In San Jose Khaled Hosseini earned a degree in biology from Santa Clara College, and then continued his education in studying medicine at the University of California, San Diego. Khaled Hosseini practiced medicine for over ten years until a year and a half after the release of “The Kite Runner” he quit this field and
