

The Hunt for mtDNA

How can a 1990s genetic breakthrough help solve a long-standing mystery about our Stone Age roots? An mtDNA clue is the key to our future.

Procedure

1. Read the introduction to the article carefully.
2. Read each number on the list and describe the important elements of the issue of identifying being genetically "Native" without being biologically the tribe's indigenous ancestor. Indicate what should be done to resolve the issue.
  - a. How would you supplement the missing genetic data if the missing portion is critical to a conclusion? Indicate what data you would collect and what methods you would use.
  - b. Explain what you think would be the most important question to be asked to resolve the issue.
  - c. In the introduction, researchers state that the long genetic distance requires an essential change.

Questions

1. Write a paragraph in your own words that discusses being genetically "Native" versus being biologically "Native" and the implications of the discovery. Discuss what archaeological findings further support genetic evidence for a genetic link to the indigenous?
2. Research the difference between a genetic distance and a genetic link and how they are related to biological relationships and how the genetic data is used to determine if there is a genetic link.
3. How do you think you would use a genetic link?

Consider the mtDNA evidence:
 Archaeologists recently discovered a Native American mtDNA sequence that is genetically very similar to a European mtDNA sequence. This discovery provides a genetic link to Europe.
 • Genetic data can be used to determine if there is a genetic link between two people.
 • Genetic data can be used to determine if there is a genetic link between two people.
