

Identifying and Educating Learners with Language Learning Disabilities: Advocating Inclusion through Teacher Education

Farida Raj, Special Needs Educator, SCERT and Sarva Siksha Abhiyan trainer trainer and Santosh Mahapatra, PhD student, Department of English, University of Hyderabad

Abstract

An integrated and inclusive approach to the education of children with special needs is yet to become a reality in India as evident from a review of the relevant policies. The National Policy for Persons with Disabilities (2006) mentions integrated education for such children, though there is nothing concrete stated about how this purpose will be achieved. However, the report of the National Focus Group on Education of Children with Special Needs (2006) emphasises the education of teachers. Moreover, the report cites a study by Julka (2004) to highlight that the current teacher education system in the country does not support the theory of inclusive education. In the light of this background, this paper tries to advocate inclusion through pre- and in-service education/training of English teachers in Language-Based Learning Disabilities (LBLD) so that English teachers working in schools can identify and educate children with language-based learning disabilities in general English classrooms. Divided into three major sections, first the paper reviews the special-education scenario in India, then it draws attention towards LBLD, and finally, the issue is discussed in relation to English language teacher education in India.

1. Special needs education in India

Special-needs education in India has a history stretching over around 130 years. The first attempt in this direction is believed to be the establishment of a school for the deaf in Bombay in 1883. In 1887, a special school for the blind was founded in Amritsar. Those schools and a few others that followed in later years were established by educational charities and were meant for the disabled. This charity approach to the education of children with special needs continued until the 1970s. The charity approach to provision has been gradually replaced a human-rights model (NCERT 2006) in recent years. Children with learning disabilities were given the right to education but sadly they have been kept aside and treated differently from others who do not have such difficulties. Today, around 10 per cent of children in India have learning disabilities of some kind (The Times of India, 27 January 2012) but still inclusive education is far from being realised. Very few government-run schools are adequately equipped to impart inclusive education. Policy changes reflect the lack of interest from the perspective
