1. A Brief Overview of the Course:

The course is intended to develop a rigorous understanding of core economic models and analysis, together with an ability to apply the analysis in a variety of contexts. The first semester focuses on developing and using models of supply and demand and on the underlying foundations of producer behaviour. The second semester examines the macroeconomy—economy-wide issues such as growth, inflation and unemployment.

Relevant mathematical techniques (e.g. solving linear equation systems, logs, basic calculus, maximization) are developed and applied to economic contexts as an integral part of the course.

Learning-by-doing, through problem solving and project work, is an important ingredient of the course, with regular on-line tests to reinforce an active approach to learning.

The course is primarily aimed at students who intend (or want to keep open the option) to progress to further study of economics in their 2nd year. Other students are welcome, but may find Economic Principles and Applications (EP&A) a more suitable alternative.

No previous study of economics is required, however students who have not previously studied economics may find it useful to take (or more informally follow) EP&A alongside Economics1A (see section 7).

A background in mathematics beyond GCSE level is required. Students with a weaker maths background will need to be prepared to work at developing their maths skills (see section 7).

2. Broad aims and intended learning outcomes

The Broad Aims of Economics 1A

- To provide each student with a sufficient understanding of basic economic theory and reasoning so that she or he can think independently and coherently about economic arguments, for example as to whether an article or leader in the Economist or Financial Times, or in some other broadsheet, makes economic sense.

Productivity in Higher Education Caroline M. Hoxby, Kevin Stange, 2020-01-10 How do the benefits of higher education compare with its costs and how does this comparison vary across individuals and institutions These questions are fundamental to quantifying the productivity of the education sector The studies in Productivity in Higher Education use rich and novel administrative data modern econometric methods and careful institutional analysis to explore productivity issues The authors examine the returns to undergraduate education differences in costs by major the productivity of for profit schools the productivity of various types of faculty and of outcomes the effects of online education on the higher education market and the ways in which the productivity of different institutions responds to market forces The analyses recognize five key challenges to assessing productivity in higher education the potential for multiple student outcomes in terms of skills earnings invention and employment the fact that colleges and universities are multiproduct firms that conduct varied activities across many domains the fact that students select which school to attend based in part on their aptitude the difficulty of attributing outcomes to individual institutions when students attend more than one and the possibility that some of the benefits of higher education may arise from the system as a whole rather than from a single institution The findings and the approaches illustrated can facilitate decision making processes in higher education
