

Chapter 1.2: Falling Balls

Vocabulary (short definition/use in a sentence)

- Mass: How difficult the ball is to accelerate
- Weight: How hard the gravity is pulling down the ball
- Acceleration due to gravity: Local strength of gravity which is constant
- Free fall: downward movement under the force of gravity
- Components: quantities that give directions
- Trajectory: combination of components when a ball is initially moving

Units (what quantity is measured in the following)

- Kilogram (kg): mass
- Newton (N): force

Equations and physical laws (express in words)

- Weight ($\vec{w} = m\vec{g}$) weight = mass \cdot acceleration due to gravity
- Uniform acceleration ($\vec{v}_f = \vec{v}_i + \vec{a}t$) present velocity = initial velocity + acceleration \cdot time
- Uniform acceleration ($\vec{x}_f = \vec{x}_i + \vec{v}_i t + \frac{1}{2}\vec{a}t^2$) present position = initial position + initial velocity \cdot time + $\frac{1}{2}$ acceleration \cdot time 2

Example problems/questions:

1. Which falls faster and which accelerates faster - a bowling ball or a tennis ball? Explain your reasoning (and if they are the same thing).
They would fall at the same time since they both have same acceleration going down.
2. How does gravity affect a ball that is thrown sideways?
Not much since components is the one affect.
3. Which takes longer - a ball rising from your hand to its peak height or returning to your hand? Why?
Takes same because initial velocity is same for rising and returning.
4. Traveling to a mystery planet, you find your weight is 10 times your weight on Earth. What is that planet's acceleration due to gravity?

98.1 m/s² Earth's gravity is 9.81 m/s² so times 10.
