

Concepts: Patterns in Triangles

Many more mathematical relationships are produced by the placement of three points in the coordinate plane with one of them generally at the origin. Consider the pattern in the graph of triangle ABC .

Students are asked to describe the point sets of vertices for the three small triangles below. They may use a plotting grid and coordinate paper. About 10 minutes is recommended. However, students are encouraged to explore a variety of point sets and to generalize the properties accordingly. The main idea here is to lead to the discovery and generalization of relations governing the geometric relationships associated with patterns of points in the coordinate plane. An additional challenge may be given to students.

1. A relationship is provided for the vertices and a generalization is made. Describe the generalization. Which two of these relationships are correct and which are incorrect? Justify the relationships, describe the relationships, and so on to the best of your ability.

a. What is the relationship that exists in these graphs?

b. What is the generalization?

c. What patterns and relationships are revealed from graphs to you in the xy -plane?

2. Reflective lines within a triangle and a regular polygon, all the vertices are points in the xy -plane. Generalize to describe the set of all the points within a triangle and a polygon in the coordinate plane. Which two generalizations are correct? Describe relationships and so on to the best of your ability.

a. What general relationships do these graphs show?
