Read the book to the students. Read the book and listen to them, and ask them to predict what they think the story might be about. After they respond, read the book to them, asking them to read along whenever they want to. Then, begin the process of using a story map to discuss the story elements. Discuss with them the elements of "setting." Explain to them that the word setting means it happens, and then write down whenever they tell you for the setting. Repeat the process with "characters." Then explain to the students that their book is about how a shape "travels." Show them some what they predict each event will be, and write down their responses. Finally, give the students the opportunity to come up with their own story.

After they finish the story's setting, make sure that the story begins and ends in the same place.

Continuing a circle story. After identifying the story's elements, the students can discuss each event in their stories. They can draw their own "characters" in the story.

Then, identify the book's main idea. Ask the students to draw a picture of the main idea. They can draw their own "characters" in the story.

Some of these stories, by specifically pointing out the elements of a story map, the students will begin to understand how stories are written.

Illustrated with the student, a triangle shape making the book's shape. The student's drawing and writing about it, doesn't know which side to go.

In Search of a Shape: Shape With Social Studies

To address a social studies lesson, compare and contrast natural shapes.

Go for a walk in search of a shape in your neighborhood. Look closely at things around you and bring a camera along to capture the shapes you see. Put the pictures into PowerPoint and make the shapes. What shapes are most common? Where are shapes found in nature? What is water, finding shapes in nature or human-made structures? Bring a globe that is made out of only one shape. Draw a picture and write about the place.
