

How to Write a Comparative Politics Paper

By Prof. David Meyer, Cedarville University

Note: This template may also be useful for certain term papers in history, comparative sociology, social work, international relations/international studies, criminal justice, etc. Always ask your professor first whether or not one of the below strategies is acceptable.

1. The Introduction:

Alice: "Would you tell me, please, which way I ought to go from here?"

Cheshire Cat: "That depends a good deal on where you want to get to."

Alice: "I don't know where. . ."

Cheshire Cat: "Then it doesn't matter which way you go!"

—Lewis Carroll, Alice in Wonderland.

There are several different ways to write an introduction, but ALWAYS ANSWER THE "So what?!" QUESTION! In other words, why is this question/problem/case/comparison interesting theoretically, important practically (especially in terms of domestic or foreign policy), counter-intuitive ("man bites dog"), or rivetingly puzzling? i.e. "Here is a case that no current body of literature in comparative politics theory can explain." Or "Iran is interesting per se as a case because it may soon develop nuclear weapons and start a thermonuclear war." Or "Comparing different welfare states may yield key insights for American policy makers seeking to improve the content of and the efficiency of delivery of social-welfare programs."

All but the Story Hook technique should have a clear and concise one-paragraph topic declaration as the first paragraph, or after a description of a problem. Some authors use their entire introduction for laying out the problem, and then they put the topic sentence at the very end of the introduction.

- a. Clearly state the problem and how you intend to solve it, using which theories. Do this in one paragraph.
- b. Pose a question and then state how you will attempt to answer it.
- c. Declare that you are comparing two or more authors' approaches to two or more cases, i.e. see the section below on the Hypothetical Deductive Method.
- d. The Story Hook: Tell an interesting story to get the reader's attention first.
 - i. Then, at the end of the story, clearly state the problem and how you intend to solve it OR
 - ii. Pose a question and then state how you will attempt to answer it.
